CASE STUDY BACKGROUND

Waxahachie Police Department identified a requirement for mobile surveillance trailers after borrowing equipment from neighboring agencies, typically during the holiday season when crimes peaked.

Relying on borrowed equipment had become unsustainable, particularly as the agency sought to be more agile and responsive in their approach to crime prevention and public safety

Waxahachie PD were successful with a $50,000 Justice Assistance grant bid through the North Central Texas Council of Governments to purchase their own mobile video surveillance equipment.

The program allows local governments and non-profit entities receive assistance in the development of projects and programs specifically designed to address crime-related issue within their communities.

THE RESULT

Speaking directly about the benefits of the WCCTV Surveillance Trailers, Waxahachie PD chief Wade Goolsby stated:

“Anytime we have a specific problem in the area we can put those out. They are great for parking lots where you have a high density of people to kind of make your presence known. The average person won’t notice it but the person who is looking to commit crimes will. So it is a good deterrent for them and a good tool for us to see what is going on.”

Goolsby further explained that the equipment is used for events such as the Texas Country Reporter Festival, which brings around 25,000 people to the city. From the tower, officers can survey the crowd without being intrusive.

“We have seen that it had worked pretty effectively during the holiday season when our crimes spike,” Goolsby said. “We wanted to continue that without having to borrow equipment from another agency.”
